

Women and staff are scared to go outside of the shelter, especially women of color, being able to go outside is the only reprieve many women experiencing homelessness have and they cannot even do that.

The incessant honking and noise from the trucks have caused significant anxiety and distress for staff and shelter residents.

Women have admitted themselves into hospital due to the increased trauma from the noise and fear.

